This guide was largely pulled from the C4C guide linked in the QR code. We hope, with this primitive print zine, to enable our fellow Oakland denizens to participate in our nominal democracy.

Making Your Voice Heard

The squeaky wheel gets the grease, and anyone who's dealt with members of the outspoken anti-homeless movement in Oakland knows just how squeaky they are. It's crucial we in turn make our voices heard - that we squeak at least as loud as the gentrifiers and haters trying to disappear us and our comrades. It is especially important to make our voices heard because we don't have the funding for advertisements and bribery that the anti-homeless movement does.

The two main ways you can make your voice heard by the Oakland city government is by

1. Contacting your city council member, and
2. Speaking at an Oakland city council meeting.

This zine aims to be a quick guide to squeaking loudly and getting the grease.

Contacting Your City Council Representative

One of the easiest methods to be heard, and one that all of the gentrifiers and haters are already definitely using, is directly contacting your city council rep. You can call or email. First, though, you need to know who that representative is. Oakland has 7 districts, each with a council member. There is also an at-large councilmember, who is elected by all the citizens of Oakland and serves as the chairperson of the council. So that person is beholden to everyone in Oakland. Refer to the map on the inside cover to determine what district you live in. You do not need an address to contact your city representative.

It is important to put pressure on your local council member, but it is also important to make your voice heard at city council.

*The best lack all conviction, while the worst
Are full of passionate intensity.*

We see this over and over. The worst people in the city – the ones you would never want to deal with – are the loudest at city council meetings. We also deserve to be heard. We cannot let ourselves be sidelined.

Speaking at a City Council Meeting

If you have a phone that can scan the QR code over on the right here, you can access the C4C guide to speaking at an Oakland City Council meeting. It's straightforward with well-done graphic design, so we definitely recommend it over this guide, but if you can't access it, here is our set of instructions for speaking at a city council meeting.

You can speak virtually (via the Internet) or physically (at the physical location of the meeting). To speak at a city council meeting, you need to submit a "speaker card." This also can be done physically or virtually.

Things to know before submitting a speaker card

- You must submit a Speaker Card before the City Clerk announces the item you wish to speak on.
  - If submitting a Speaker Card by email or through Oakland's website, take a screenshot of your email or online Speaker Registration in case your name is not called. This is particularly important if you submit a Speaker Card on the day of the meeting!
- You are not required to give your name or address in order to give Public Comment.
- Submitting a Speaker Card through Oakland's website requires folks to create an account.
  - If you submit a Speaker Card through Oakland's website, the name you used to create your account is the name the City Clerk will call during the Meeting.

Submitting a Speaker Card IN PERSON:

Physical Speaker Cards are available in Council Chambers at the start of public meetings (e.g., 3:30pm for City Council Meetings). The City Clerk may be present to hand them out, but they are most often on one of the tables on either side of the Public Speaker Podium.
